Supervision is designed to provide guidance and ensure competency, therefore information from sessions will be shared during supervision, but will otherwise be subject to confidentiality. Names are shortened or changed, and other identifying information is changed to protect confidentiality. For Telehealth sessions, the supervisor may "join" those sessions along with recording sessions for later review and will be disposed of after doing so.

Consultation and disclosures during the sessions between therapist and client are held in strict confidence, with the protection of the law, but also subject to it. Clients have a right to ask about the protection of case records. Exceptions to confidentiality include when a client presents a physical danger to self or another, or when child/elder abuse or neglect (including physical punishment, verbal abuse, sexual abuse, child pornography, denial of basic needs, etc.) is suspected. Mental health professionals are required by law to inform potential victims and legal authorities so that protective measures can be taken.

CRS 12-43-214(1)(d) Privileged Communications – The information provided by a client during therapy sessions is legally confidential, except as provided in section 12-43-218, and except for certain legal exceptions which will be identified by the therapist, should any such situation arise during therapy. Examples would be the mandatory reporting of child abuse, or where there may be harm to the client or others. You should be aware that in the case of a board complaint, it is likely that your file will be subpoenaed and reviewed by the board and its attorneys.

Therapists are ethically required to consult with other mental health providers, when necessary, to ensure competence in treatment. I further understand that any requests for obtaining medical or mental health information from others or releasing such information to others will be done only with my written consent. I have the ability to withdraw this consent at any time recognizing that I cannot undo any action taken prior to withdrawal.

I understand that therapy will utilize verbal psychotherapeutic techniques, body awareness and regulation techniques, and bilateral stimulation techniques (eye movement, hand-held devices, tapping) to help me grow as an individual, a partner within a relationship, and/or as a member of a family or social group.

I understand I am able to request information about the methods of therapy and techniques used, including the duration of the therapy and fee structure.

CRS 12-43-214(1)(d) provides the following: A client is entitled to receive information about the methods of therapy, the techniques used, the duration of therapy (if known), and the fee structure. A client may seek a second opinion from another therapist or may terminate therapy at any time.

In a professional relationship, sexual intimacy is always inappropriate and should be reported to the grievance board.

I understand that in this office, no nudity, no physical examination, nor any overt sexual behavior will be involved in the assessment and treatment of my sexual concerns. Sexual intimacy is never permitted between therapist and client in any respect. Further, clients will not be expected to engage in sexual activities that are against my moral or religious convictions, and clients maintain the right to ask about the therapeutic purpose of any homework assignment given.

Christianne Davis is not a physician and cannot, therefore, prescribe medication.

I understand that upon my request for assistance with a sexual concern, professionally recognized procedures for the treatment of sexual dysfunction will be utilized. When clinically appropriate and with my consent, this treatment may involve the use of educational audiovisual materials, recommendations for reading, behavioral homework tasks, and other awareness and/or relaxation assignments.

I understand that a therapist is a "consultant" and a resource professional only and that interventions and recommendations offered may be freely accepted or rejected. Therefore, decisions made during and after counseling are the responsibility of the client, couple, and/or the family.
